ST. LOUIS CONVENTION

Pennsylvania Delegation 300 Strong Swooped Down on St. Louis—Jobbing for Vice Presidential Candidates—Governor Mayor of Missouri Visited Delegation.

The Pennsylvania Democratic delegation started for St. Louis on Sunday by a special Pullman train consisting of six coaches and a diner.

Among the notables who occupied chairs in the delegation were National Committeeman, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, Judge Auten, Judge Orris, our candidate for United States Senator, State Chairman, William S. McLain, Jr., and Robert T. Keenan, who had charge of the hotel and transportation arrangements for the delegation.

From Bedford, were Doctors Americus and Walter F. Enfield, Geo. Enfield and myself. Geo. had the honor of carrying the delegation banner.

I have the honor of representing Jerre S. Black of York, Pa., on the floor of the Convention as a Delegate at Large, Mr. Black being very ill at this time with pneumonia.

I hope that Mr. Black may recover and am sorry that it became necessary for substitution and I wish to thank Mr. Palmer for the honor of substituting me which gives me the privilege of voting for Wilson for the nomination, a real pleasure.

On our way through the States we decided to have Mr. Palmer announce to the public that the 68 delegates to the Pennsylvania would support Thomas R. Marshall for Vice President.

This put a quietus on the lobby of the Pennsylvania delegation and rather places Marshall in the lead for this position. The situation now looks like Wilson and Marshall.

Sullivan of Illinois is making a hard fight for the place as well as Governor Mayor of Missouri.

We arrived in St. Louis at 1:35 Monday, p. m. We were the first delegation to parade the convention city with a band leading.

We had private street cars for the delegation and paraded to the Jefferson Hotel, our lobby headquarters and to the Plaza Hotel, our rooming headquarters. This took about 2 hours.

We then settled down for the evening, after over a hundred got located in the hotel, which took some time, you may know.

National Conventions make cities busy and tax their capacities. The New York delegation arrived and has headquarters directly opposite the Pennsylvania quarters at the Jefferson.

The Maryland hasn't arrived as yet nor has the Ohio, New Jersey or West Virginia or neighboring States. Large banners and placards tell the location of all delegations.

The aftermath of the Chicago convention has made "Teddy" a host of enemies. They blame the leaders for selling out the party and its principles wholesale and retail. No amount of censure is too great to put on Roosevelt.

The sentiment through the West seems to favor a second nomination, but word from Wall St. indicates that they cannot raise the funds and will be forced to go along.

Just how many will march to the tune of Wall Street and the money Kings no one knows, but the West wants to swing in Murdock or Johnston and carry along the Progressive party and fight Hughes and Fairbanks.

Time will tell the conclusion but "Teddy's" action has completely eliminated him forever from politics and even any degree of leadership.

One of the notable features of the Pennsylvania delegation was the absence of intoxicated delegates. No booze was used on the train until we reached Pittsburg.

A delegation of six or eight boarded the train there who were tanked up pretty well and had some beer along.

These however discovered that they were in company which did not tolerate that and quit the thing because they seemed to feel ashamed of the fact.

Our delegation was clean, I think the cleanest that ever came out of the old Keystone State to represent its Democracy.

Yours truly, Victor E. P. Barkman.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Samuel Stonerook of Woodbury Killed When Thrown from Auto—Companions Escape Serious Injury.

Samuel S. Stonerook, 45 years old and unmarried, residing at Woodbury, Bedford county, was instantly killed at Allegheny Furnace, at 7:30 o'clock, Tuesday evening, when a Ford automobile, in which he was riding collided with a telephone post.

Stonerook sustained a fracture of the skull and died five minutes after the accident. Five companions in the machine escaped serious injury. The automobile was demolished.

Stonerook, with five companions, Frank Amick, J. C. Settle, Luther Clouse, Howard Pressell and J. Blair Gibson came to Altoona early yesterday to see the parade and take in the circus.

It was on their return trip that the unfortunate accident occurred. Amick was owner and driver of the car. He was going at a rapid pace, and when a sharp curve in the road at the southern limits of the little hamlet of Allegheny Furnace was reached, he was unable to negotiate the curve with the above disastrous results.

Stonerook was riding in the rear seat. Amick attempted to round the curve at a high rate of speed, and ran into a ditch at the right of the road, about ten feet from a telephone post.

He was unable, owing to the momentum of the car, to escape the post. When the crash came, Stonerook was thrown over the windshield against the post.

The impact upset the machine, and as the other occupants of the car were not jarred from their seats, they escaped serious results.

All six of the party were well known residents of Woodbury. Stonerook, who practically led a retired life, owning a small farm outside the town. He was about 50 years old and unmarried, making his home with two maiden sisters, Sara and Amanda Stonerook.

He is also survived by two brothers, George and Levi, and one sister, Mrs. R. L. Weber, all of Woodbury.

Franklin Bailey

Harrison Township lost one of its most respected citizens when Franklin Bailey suddenly passed away at his home near Mann's Choice, last Friday. He had felt slightly indisposed that morning, but had eaten a hearty breakfast, and was working in the corn-crib, when without warning fell over and soon breathed his last.

Mr. Bailey was a very amiable man, a good citizen, a kind and obliging neighbor, a faithful son, and a devoted husband and father. He was a member of Grace Reformed Church of Mann's Choice, a teacher in the Sunday School, and had just recently been elected a deacon. He was one that will be greatly missed by his relatives and friends.

Franklin Bailey was born April 10, 1872, died June 9, 1916. In 1900 he was married to Miss Grace Hiner, who with two boys, Paul and Clyde survives. Interment was made in Bedford cemetery.

Adult Bible Classes Rally

This Sunday the teachers of one of the Men's Bible Classes from each Church will exchange places. The idea is to bring an exchange of ideas in the different ways of handling the lessons, both to the class and the teacher.

Already the spirit of class pride has been aroused with a desire of each class doing themselves proud in having a large attendance for the visiting teacher.

The idea was suggested by Mr. Fred Sammel of the Lutheran Sunday School and all members of various classes are urged to be out in full force to extend a hearty welcome to the visiting teacher.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and rebuild your strength.

Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

STEADFAST CONFIDENCE

The Following Statement Should Form Conclusive Proof of Merit to Every Bedford Reader.

SOMERSET LOSES CAPTAIN CROUSE

Capable Lineman and Councilman Takes His Family to Pittsburgh.

Could stronger proof of the merit of any remedy be desired than the statements of grateful endorser who say their confidence has been undiminished by lapse of time? These are the kind of statements that are appearing constantly in your local papers for Doan's Kidney Pills. They are twice told, and confirmed, with new enthusiasm. Can any reader doubt the following? It's from a Bedford resident.

W. H. Weyant, grocer, 243 West Pitt St., Bedford, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills are not a new medicine to me. I have used them off and on for a number of years and wouldn't be without them. I have to be on my feet a great deal and also do heavy lifting and at times, this brings on backache and other kidney ailments. A few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills always drive the attacks away." (Statement given October 10, 1907.) MORE THAN SIX YEARS LATER, Mr. Weyant said: "I still have a good word for Doan's Kidney Pills. I use them occasionally, when I feel in need of a kidney medicine and they soon make me well."

The above statement must carry conviction to the mind of every reader. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Weyant has twice publicly recommended. The remedy backed by home testimony, 50c all stores. The Rev. M. A. Kieffer, B. D., of Schuylkill Haven, Pa., gave an excellent address on "The Sunday School and the Great Commissions," after which he went to the M. E. Church.

While waiting on the speaker from the M. E. Church a large collection was lifted and the committee on time and place of next meeting gave the following report, which was accepted.

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

THE FIRST WHITE CHILD BORN IN AMERICA.

By A. W. MACY.

On July 22, 1587, a colony sent out by Sir Walter Raleigh landed at Roanoke, Virginia. In this colony, it is said, were ninety-one men, seventeen women and nine children. The colony was incorporated as "The Borough of Raleigh in Virginia," and John White was chosen governor. His daughter, August Eleanor, had married one of the colonists, a young man named Dare. On August 18 Mrs. Dare gave birth to a daughter, to whom was given the name Virginia. She was the first white child born in America. Shortly after her birth Governor White returned to England for supplies. He remained longer than he had intended, and when he finally got back to Roanoke the colony had disappeared. He searched long and anxiously for the missing members, among whom were his daughter and his grandchild. But the lost colony was never found. Probably the older members were massacred by the Indians, and the children scattered among the various tribes. Thus the first white child born in America, if she grew up to womanhood, probably passed her life in savagery and remembered nothing of the ways of civilization.

The Loving Cup

By Augustus G. Sherwin

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

His pulse beat high, his eye glowed with excitement, the pride of life was in its fullest expression. It was a moment supreme—the high point of fame and favor.

The loving cup!—It stood before him—a delicate, costly creation, and to Ross Worden the script letters of his name, showing out in clear relief, were to him as grand and precious as though blazoned from some great scroll of fame. As the last words expressing his heartfelt appreciation of the gift friendly souls had bestowed upon him fell from his lips the warm applause of tried and trusted friends thrilled him to his loyal soul.

"There will be a bigger one when you come back from the front, Worden!" hurred a convivial member of the group of journalists, artists and men of wealth and fashion.

"It's a new experience," said another. "I fancy it will be inspiring and new."

"Decidedly," commented a grizzled veteran newspaper man with a scarred face, who had written war stories on the actual field sixty years ago.

"Good luck, old fellow," hailed an ambitious-looking young man, Dale Armour, his pretty, blushing sister, Nella, on his arm.

Worden paused. The reigning pride in his face softened down to a sentiment of interest, an emotion subtle and compelling. He was sincerely glad when someone accosted Armour and engaged him in conversation.

"Just take charge of Nella for a minute or two; won't you?" suggested Armour, and Worden found himself beside the lovely girl in a retired corner of the clubroom.

Her presence acted upon him like some sweet angelic creature leading him from the feverish atmosphere of society into the calm of soulful peace, as if in some sylvan solitude. She had only commonplace compliments for the honor bestowed upon him, friendly wishes for his success as an aspiring war correspondent. Yet present and future were obscured to his mental vision as he looked into her beautiful eyes. Their shrinking depths seemed to work some alluring power he could not analyze.

A rose had fallen from her corsage. He picked it up and placed it tenderly between the leaves of a memorandum book.

"An amulet," he said in a low, intense tone—"may I keep it without offending you?"

Her lips formed a voiceless assent. She was all a-tremble. Her breath came quickly. In rash impetuosity he reached to take her hand.

"All right, sister, it's getting late," intervened Dale. "Thanks, Worden, and again good luck go with you," and the fairy vision vanished and the words unspoken that meant happiness unutterable.

"Better so," sadly soliloquized Worden as he reached home alone an hour later. "What can I offer that delicate creature of assurance of the luxury she is born to? Again, why burden her with a tie that may mean bereavement from the first battle field? No, it is better as it is."

Six months to the day and Ross Worden, begrimed, footsore, limping wearily, crossed a barren, desolate stretch of Belgian territory just at dusk. He presented the appearance of some homeless refugee, war-driven from shelter and security. In the distance in almost every direction the glow of camp fires showed, and ever and anon a bomb burst in midair.

Half a mile beyond the open stretch was a ridge of hills, and beyond that Ross Worden, fresh from the country of the enemy, loaded metaphorically with information that comprised the "war scoop" of the century, knew where the friendly army lay. Particularly he scanned the observation towers here and there dimly outlined against the fading evening sky. One of them was a signal and telegraph tower. For that he made, eagerly as a pilgrim for a mecca. He hummed a gay tune as he tolled onward, it was one played that night of the loving-cup episode. He thought of Nella. He took from his pocket his memorandum book. From between its pages he tenderly lifted the rose, now faded, to his lips.

Ah! for her sake was he glad that, striking out on an independent line, he had penetrated to the very heart of the enemy's country, was returning with secret and exclusive information which, blazoned forth to an interpreted reading world, would signalize intrepid efforts and place him high among the great war-correspondents of the year.

With almost a cheer Ross Worden dragged himself into the signal tower. The operator stared askance. A man lounging and smoking nearby stared, sprang up in astonishment and cried out:

"You—Worden!" Worden recognized the man, Pierce Disbrow, a journalist of poor repute, a man he did not like. He greeted him in a friendly way, but instantly centered his attention upon the operator. He drew a dozen closely-written sheets from his pocket.

"Union News service, my man," he announced. "You must get this copy to the cable instanter!"

"All right," nodded the man, while Disbrow glared with envy at what he surmised from the exultant face of Worden must comprise some big "scoop."

"Look out!" abruptly shouted Disbrow, and bolted for the open air. The others were not so fortunate. An unexpected bomb had come direct from the enemy's camp across the river. It shattered the frail station as though it were an egg shell. When the devastation was complete Disbrow crept in among the debris. He found the operator dead and Worden insensible and apparently fatally injured. He trept forth again in possession of the "scoop" data of Ross Worden.

Three months later, poor, wretched, limping, a mere shadow of his former self, Ross Worden returned to the city which he had left with such high hopes. When he reported to his news bureau it was to be treated coldly, indifferently, as a man who had failed to make good. It was then that he learned that the news he had gathered at such peril had been used by Disbrow, who had received high credit for the same.

The discovery crushed him. He was still ill from his wound received in the explosion. He sought poor, obscure lodgings; he was prostrated with a fever. To pay his way his landlord piece by piece pawned his few possessions—even the loving cup.

Then a spell of fever and delirium, and he awoke in a beautiful room, and a beautiful woman was ministering to his wants—Nella Armour!

It was no dream, and this was the Armour home, and soon Dale Armour was at his side and telling him how they had found him—poor, ill, deserted by his friends.

"It was Nella who did it," he said. "Do you notice yonder your loving cup? She saw it in a window on sale, redeemed it and that led to our tracing you, and now—dear old friend, look!"

Dale Armour held before the eyes of Worden a newspaper exposure of the perfidy of Pierce Disbrow in stealing the credit of the great "war scoop." This rehabilitated Worden, and with restored health the highest ranks of journalism were open to him.

Convalescent a week later, Nella Armour pressed to his lips a cup containing medicine. She kissed the rim tenderly as she did so, for there was a perfect understanding between them now. His eyes filled with tears of joy.

"The loving cup!" he murmured—"the loving cup, full to overflowing!"

NOT EVEN LOVERS' QUARREL

Dialogue Might Have Seemed of Significance to Listener, but Really It Had None.

(A dialogue between He and She.)

"What have you got there?"

"Where?"

"In your hands, behind your back."

"I'm not going to show you."

"Ah, please do."

"Promise you won't try to take it away from me?"

He sneaks up close to the girl, who furtively holds before him a photo, which he clutches with both hands.

"That's beautiful!"

"Do you really think so?"

"Yes, pretty nice. But you are much more beautiful, you know."

"Now you're flattering me. I think I look just horrid in it."

"Oh, you don't. Aren't you going to give this one to me?"

The girl flies to the other side of the room in evident terror. The youth flies over after her, and in an apparent struggle manages to (quite easily) wrench the photo from her grasp.

"Give it back to me! Please give it back!" she pleads.

"Give it back? I guess not!"

"I think you're just the meanest thing!"

In a little while they quiet down, and, despite the fact that she continues to coax him for the photo every few minutes, he carries it away with him.

She goes to bed perfectly happy, for she intended that he should have it; in fact, had it taken especially for him.—Detroit Free Press.

Condescension.

"Isn't the style of music you have been playing rather lacking in classic quality?"

"Oh, yes," replied the highly accomplished girl. "But one must show some consideration for the tastes of one's parents."

TO LONG BAY

By LOUISE OLIVER.

"Mother, don't let Sis go to the Bay ter's alone. She's so flighty, she's likely to land in Kalamazoo instead of Long Bay."

Carolyn looked at her brother contemptuously. "Just because you happen to be a football fan doesn't give you any license to insult your sister. Mother, mayn't I go?"

"So Carolyn triumphantly prepared for her journey, and upon the day set, her brother resignedly carried her bag to the station, bought her tickets and put her on the train to Long Bay."

"Something will happen to Sis before she's a day older or I'll miss my guess," he grumbled as he left the train. "Hello, Charlie, where are you bound for?" he called to a man who bumped into him in his hurry to catch the moving car.

"Baxter's—Long Bay," called Charlie from the step, and in reply he caught something of sister—same place—look after—"and the train was beyond hearing."

This is what actually happened.

Carolyn, armed with candy and magazines and some unopened mail, proceeded to make herself entirely comfortable for the day's journey. The Pullman car had few occupants and she spent several minutes in a brief inspection.

The man across the aisle was young, good looking, and, to Carolyn's present annoyance, evidently very much interested in her.

The train flew on and she began to tire of the trip. She began to resent in earnest the half-smiling glances of the man across the aisle.

"I'll go out and stand on the platform for a change," she fumed. So suiting the action to the word, she sailed grandly down the aisle upon adventure bent. She wound up in the drawing room.

"I wonder if that silly man is still there," she mused, looking back through her door.

"Tickets, please," said the conductor, sticking his head in the door.

Carolyn had, in fact, forgotten about hers. It was in her handbag inside the big bag down the aisle. She arose. "It's back there. I'll get it," she said. She went back to her old seat in the car opposite the man she detested.

But there was no bag there! She looked around. She was in the right place she was sure—directly across from the man. Then she spied a bag, her bag she was positive, half hidden under the man's seat.

"My ticket is in my bag and the bag's gone!" she declared to the conductor, never taking her eyes from the bag across the aisle. "I left it here a few minutes ago."

"It can't have left the train. It must be around somewhere," said the conductor patiently. "You look and I'm sure you'll find it."

And impulsive Carolyn, for whom her brother had rightfully predicted disaster, answered: "I have found it. That's it right there, I am positive." She nodded toward the half-hidden bag across the aisle.

"But this is my bag," said the man. "I know it is mine," protested the stranger, "but—" with a smile that maddened Carolyn. "I'll pay the lady's fare." He drew from his pocket a roll of bills.

"No—he won't!" Carolyn assured the conductor savagely. "That's my bag! I guess I know it. But I won't argue with either of you, and if that whistle means a stop I'll get off and telegraph back to the city for help. Besides I'll telegraph ahead for—" with a meaning glance at the suspected thief.

The train did slow down and stop and before the men could prevent her, Carolyn was off the car and in midst of a dreary, bleak landscape without a house in sight, and the train sliding down the track with never a sign of a reason for having stopped at all.

With tears of rage and chagrin Carolyn started to tramp down a lonely road at random, and the snow—as it always does in tragic moments—began to fall. She could not tell whether she was going north, south east or west, and, finally, after wandering hopelessly for a half hour, she sat down on a stone in despair.

Charlie Pendleton, as soon as Carolyn had made her entirely unexpected move and left the train, grabbed his own bag and then contritely extricated another from under a seat across the aisle, but not exactly opposite. He knew the girl had returned to the wrong seat when she came back for her bag, because he had changed his own in her absence. Now that his little joke had turned out so seriously, he was ready to blame himself as the possible cause of a tragedy.

Reparation, he convinced himself, consisted in managing to have the train stopped at the next town, hiring a sleigh and going in search of her through a regular blizzard, with only a general idea as to her present whereabouts.

Luck was with him, and he found her, storm driven and frightened into a half penitent and wholly forgiving mood.

Moreover, they contrived to get to Long Bay that day and were only a few hours late. Furthermore, as a reward for keeping her escape a secret from the family and for certain other reasons, Carolyn had promised to marry the man across the aisle. An Ordinance
Authorizing the construction of a Sewage Disposal Plant, Main Sewers and a System of Sanitary Lateral Sewers in the Borough of Bedford, Pennsylvania.

Be it ordained and enacted by the Borough Council and it is hereby ordained and enacted by authority of the same.

Section I. That a sewage disposal plant with the necessary drains and outfall sewers from the Borough of Bedford leading to the same be constructed, about twelve hundred feet north from the Raystown Branch of the Juniata River, within two thousand feet from the extreme eastern end of the Borough of Bedford according to plans and specifications furnished by Charles E. Collins, Civil Engineer, P.E. and approved by the Department of Health of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania by order of the Board of Health, dated September 22, 1909, and entered of record in the Office of the Recorder of Deeds and County Clerk of Bedford, Pennsylvania, September 20, 1909, and by permit of said Commissioner of Health dated June 2, 1913, and recorded in said Recorder's Office June 10, 1913.

Section II. That the main outfall sewers with the branches thereto, leading from the said Borough of Bedford to the above mentioned disposal plant, be built and constructed according to plans and specifications furnished by Charles E. Collins, and approved by the Department of Health by permits referred to in Section I, upon the location and line of the sewers shown by said plans and specifications above mentioned. Provided that before the construction of either of the sewers without the limits of said specifications or any part of the sewer system north of and beyond the Anderson Street, a plan, revised plan or plan showing the sewer line made by the Commissioner of Health of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, shall be submitted to the said Commissioner of Health.

Section III. That a system of sanitary lateral sewers be built and constructed in the Borough of Bedford, according to the plans and specifications furnished by the said Charles E. Collins, Civil Engineer, and approved by the Department of Health of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Nothing in this ordinance shall be construed to prevent Council by appropriate action from postponing the construction of any part of this sewer system, until there shall be need therefor. And Council may from time to time add other streets or highways of the Borough of Bedford to the said plan with the same force and effect as if they had been included in this ordinance.

Section IV. These sewers shall receive only sanitary sewage only. All private sanitary sewers shall be abandoned or intercepted. No surface or roof drainage shall enter the system and upon the construction of sewerage disposal works, the present existing sewers shall be used as storm sewers only.

Section V. The cost of construction of the sewage disposal plant, and that part of the cost of the main sewer in excess of the cost of a proper local sewer, sufficient to accommodate the abutting property, shall be paid out of the Borough funds, of said Borough.

Section VI. The cost of the sanitary lateral sewers, manholes, lampholes, flush tanks, catch basins, etc., shall be assessed against the abutting properties in accordance with the provisions of Act of Assembly of 1889 and the supplements thereto by the foot front rule. And that six inch lines be built from said sewers to the curb line of the abutting property, and the cost thereof, also assessed against the respective property owners.

Section VII. The said assessments may be paid in semi-annual installments, which installments shall bear interest at a rate of six per centum from the date of the commencement of the work or construction of the said improvement until paid; and to provide for the payment of the cost and expense of such improvement as it progresses the Borough Council may issue bonds in such sums as may be required, in an amount not exceeding the amount of the assessment. Said bonds shall rest alone for their security and payment upon the said assessments, and shall be payable at periods not exceeding five years from date of their issue, and shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding six per centum per annum, payable semi-annually.

Lians to secure the said assessments shall be entered in the prothonotary's office of Bedford County, as provided for in the Act of Assembly, Approved June 15, 1911.

Section VIII. The proper officers of the Borough are hereby authorized to execute such petitions, bonds, and other instruments in writing required by law to enable the Borough to condemn and acquire such lands, easements, rights of way and other property rights as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance and operation of said disposal plant and system of public sewerage.

Section IX. Nothing herein contained shall prevent Council from changing the plan of the disposal plant, by permission of the said Commissioner of Health, so as to conform with the improvements in the construction of disposal plants.

Ordained and enacted this 17th day of May, 1916.

CUCUMBER MOSAIC DISEASE

Attacks Field and Greenhouse Cucumbers—Popularly Termed "White Pickle" and "Nubbins."

Washington, D. C.—A new disease of cucumbers, known as the mosaic disease, has appeared during the past few years in commercial greenhouses and in fields where cucumbers are grown for pickling purposes. The disease has been known longest and is now most widespread and severe in the Middle West, where the industry of growing cucumbers for pickling is centered, particularly in the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota. In greenhouses, the disease was reported from Illinois as early as 1908, and is known to occur to a more or less limited extent in New York, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, and other States. Recent investigations of the disease have resulted in the discovery of its nature, that it is closely related to mosaic diseases of other plants, and the present indications are that it can be controlled by the introduction of sanitary measures and insect control methods. Further experiments with control measures are being carried out.

Appearance of Diseased Plants

The mosaic disease is commonly known in Michigan, Indiana and Wisconsin as "white pickle". In Minnesota it is commonly called "nubbins." The disease is characterized in the field by definite plant, fruit and leaf symptoms. When plants are attacked while very young, they are markedly dwarfed by the action of the disease, growth is slow, the runners are very much shortened, the leaves are correspondingly reduced in size, the plants blossom sparingly, and the amount of fruit is very much reduced. When older plants become diseased the principal visible effects are on the subsequent growth of vines and fruit, the vine tips and leaves being dwarfed and mottled and the fruit malformed as described elsewhere.

The leaves of diseased plants are dwarfed, often curled and wrinkled, and usually have a mosaic or marbled appearance in which areas of light and dark green alternate. In some cases the leaves brown and die back from the tips.

The fruits are very conspicuously affected, being dwarfed, more or less mottled or blotched with areas of darker green on a background of light green, greenish yellow, or almost white. In the most decided cases the green areas are raised and appear as definite warts or protuberances, sometimes of considerable size and the fruits take on many abnormal shapes. In some cases the fruits are almost white, hence, the name "white pickle." This name probably is due to a confusion of this diseased condition with the white or albino plants which typically bear white-colored pickles, and which have been known to occur occasionally in fields for many years. The discoloration and warty condition of the fruits, which often appear on cucumbers not more than an inch or two long, render them unfit for pickling purposes, so that in addition to the great reduction in yield caused by the disease, many, if not all, of the fruits produced by diseased vines are unmarketable.

In the greenhouse the disease is quite similar in its principal symptoms to those found in the field, the principal differences being that the disease appears to be more virulent, many of the plants wilting and dying.

Nature of the Disease

The mosaic disease has recently been studied by the Michigan Experiment Station in co-operation with the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, and by the University of Rochester in co-operation with Cornell University Agricultural Experiment Station and its nature discovered. It belongs to the same class as the other mosaic diseases of tobacco, potato, tomato, poke weed, and other plants, which have been known for some time. The exact cause of this class of trouble has not been discovered, but it is considered to be what is known as a filterable virus, an agent of infection which is so finely divided that it will pass through a porcelain filter and still retain its ability to reproduce the disease when injected into healthy plants. The sap or juice of any portion of a diseased vine if injected into a healthy vine will produce the disease. The period of incubation, that is, the time which elapses from the inoculation of the vine to the first visible symptoms of the disease, in the greenhouse is from 7 to 14 days, while in the field it is usually 14 to 25 days. The agencies of transmission of the disease from diseased to healthy plants are doubtless many. It has been definitely proven that plant lice transferred from diseased to healthy plants will carry the disease. It is highly probable that other insects will be found to act as carriers. It is also practically certain that the disease is spread by pickers when harvesting the cucumbers.

Control Measures

Judging from the nature of the disease and from the preliminary experiments thus far carried out, the remedial measures indicated by our present knowledge are (1) the eradication or control of insect pests which act as carriers of the disease, and (2) the application of sanitary measures to eliminate the sources of infection. To be most effective, these methods must be carried out by all the farmers of a community. Rigid insect control measures should be started as soon as the plants are up and continued throughout the season. The fields should be gone over repeatedly throughout the season, especially previous to the beginning of pickling, and all mosaic diseased plants pulled and destroyed as well as plants with which they have come in contact. Owing to the fact that greenhouse conditions are much more completely under control than field conditions, it would seem an easier task to control the disease there. As previously stated for field control, all diseased plants should be pulled and destroyed as soon as found and the insects should be eradicated to prevent their spreading the disease.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

A Double Confession

By Frank E. Finch

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I never imagined human nature could ever be like this," said Rev. John Saunders to Miss Mary, the matron at the Shelter society's headquarters.

Miss Mary smiled upon him with the dignity of five and twenty years, four of which had been spent in the society's service.

"I guess it's the same everywhere," Mr. Saunders, she answered lightly, mentally registering her pity that a young man of her own age should know so little of life. In fact, Mr. Saunders, who had come straight to the chaplain's post from the theological seminary, a month before, was, in comparison with herself, a child.

Miss Mary had evinced a decided partiality for Rev. Mr. Saunders. He, himself, was not indifferent to her. In the secrecy of his heart he had even dared to dream things relating to a little home somewhere, when he got his coveted post in a small town, far from the noise of the lower East side. In this home, like a presiding genius, was enthroned Miss Mary Pagshaw, with a changed name. What Miss Mary thought must not be revealed. But she thought a good deal of him.

"If I could advise it, Mr. Saunders," said Miss Mary, "I wouldn't be quite so eager to save these men's souls. They're pretty hardened, some of them. They want example more than preaching. Now there's Red Larrigan. Five years ago, when he began coming here, he was a hardened drunkard. Now he—he works sometimes. And he's quit swearing. Well, Mr. Harrison never spoke one word to him about salvation. Never mind his soul until its ready," he used to say. "We'll feed his body and show him the difference in conditions by example. And any day he may come up to the mercy seat. Well, Mr. Saunders, Red Larrigan is a far different man from what he was, and, mark you, the day will come when you'll finish what Mr. Harrison began."

She spoke with great earnestness, but the young clergyman was not convinced. He, too, had noticed a difference in Larrigan, even during that month. His heart was burning to pull this piece of human wreckage out of the mire. There was "Blister" Mike. Mike was a regular hobo who put into the mission during the winter and found subsistence in return for some very meager work at the wood-pile.

On the next evening both these characters being in attendance, Mr. Saunders took the opportunity for a little private talk with each.

The results were disconcerting. "Red" relapsed. He uttered an oath.

"Five years I've been coming here, Mr. Saunders, and nobody never said a word about religion to me," he complained, greatly aggrieved. "I dunno what to make of it. Seems to me it ain't fair on a guy." And he ended with a threat, which he had no intention of carrying out, of transferring his patronage elsewhere.

"Blister" listened with the same sense of a grievance, but Mr. Saunders got only vague promises out of him.

He did not notice how the two down-and-outs put their heads together after the meeting, while they supped their coffee and munched the slabs of bread and butter with which the mission provided them.

It was some days later that Mr. Saunders was amazed, after the service, to receive a voluntary visit from "Blister."

"Yes, my dear fellow, what can I do for you?" he inquired, laying his hand upon the hobo's shoulder.

"I want to tell you, mister, your words went straight to my heart," said "Blister." "And it made me feel what you said—we got to square our selves. I'm wanted in Chicago."

"Wanted, Blister—I mean Mike?" "Bigamy," said "Blister" laconically. "You have committed bigamy?" "And arson. That's what they called it. I burned down our home to get rid of my old woman. She beat it. Else it would have been murder as well."

"Dear me!" muttered the young man, staring hopelessly at the tramp. "My dear fellow, you—of course you're going to give yourself up to the police."

"Police?" shouted "Blister." "If I wanted to do that I could have done it any time the last three years. No, what I want is to get square, to be forgiven."

For half an hour Mr. Saunders pleaded with him in vain. "Blister" apparently had no intention of paying the penalty of his crimes, and at last stalked off in a huff—to admit "Red."

"Mr. Saunders," "Red" began, "I been thinking over your words about getting square, and I want to tell you something that's been weighing on my mind for years."

"Red" could talk quite well if he tried to. "Four years ago I killed a man!"

"Killed a man!" echoed the young minister, staring at this new confidant in absolute horror.

"Yep, in Chicago," said "Red." "I was while I was engaged in a little private affair—well, sir, a burglary. He was an old guy, too, turned eighty I believe. I smashed his head in with my jimmy. He shouldn't have interfered, at his age, unless he'd had a thicker head. But, mister Saunders, his last look has haunted me to my dying day. I want to get square."

John Saunders placed both his hands on "Red's" shoulders and looked him earnestly in the eyes.

"There is only one way in which you can square and make atonement for your past," he said.

"I know it!" shouted "Red" exultantly. "Name it. I'll do it."

"I will pay your fare back to Chicago," answered the clergyman.

"Red's" jaw dropped. "What in blazes would I want to go back to Chicago for?" he asked. "I had trouble enough getting away."

To give yourself up and satisfy the law," said Mr. Saunders. "That is the only way in which you can square yourself."

"I won't, I tell you," shouted "Red." "And you won't snitch on me, neither. I come to you and told you that in confidence. I come to you to get square and you want to kill me!"

And he flung himself out of the clergyman's presence, leaving Mr. Saunders white and shaking.

All that night he thought over his predicament. Here were two of his flock, one a murderer, the other with two atrocious crimes unpunished. Both were repentant; neither was willing to pay the price of forgiveness. What should he do? Could he betray them?

He was too sick to get up that morning. In the afternoon he rose and dressed; just as he had completed his toilet there came a tap at the door and Miss Mary stood revealed, carrying a tray on which a hot lunch was smoking.

"I was afraid you were ill, Mr. Saunders, when you didn't come down to breakfast," she explained. "I hope it is nothing much?"

In spite of the weight upon the young man's mind he could not help thinking that he would like to catch this vision and keep her to be his for ever.

Miss Mary set down the tray and came toward him, holding out her hands impulsively. "You are in trouble," she said. "Tell me what it is."

He told her, sick and trembling. When he had finished he asked for her advice. But to his amazement Miss Mary was actually smiling—smiling, while the tears stood in her eyes.

"Oh Mr. Saunders!" she exclaimed. "You didn't believe a word those two dreadful lars said? Why, I saw them plotting together last night. They are both highly respectable men, of their kind, except for drink and shiftlessness. Mr. Saunders, they wanted to give you something to occupy your mind, that's all. They tried that trick with Mr. Harrison once. You speak to them and you'll find out."

The young man gasped. "Are you sure, Miss Mary?" he demanded, seizing her hands again.

"Dead sure," she answered. And suddenly a silence fell between them.

"Miss Mary," said John in an altered voice, "I am a fool. I need someone to look after me. Will you—won't you—will you try, dear?"

And Miss Mary promised that she would.

Say "Women," Not "Ladies."

Don't say "ladies," please, don't draw that distinction. Ladies belong to the past, the Victorian period saw the last of them, writes Jane Cowell in the Washington Times.

Modern womanhood is something nobler, and it has for its ideal, "sisterhood," the equality of women with our class distinction; that is the new note in our life. Women, the world over, have come to recognize their duties toward each other. The finest life is no longer respected for merely being a fine lady; she is more honored for what she does for the poor, unfortunate members of her sex. The most women in our great, glorious world have reached out and given a helping hand to unhappy girls like Ellen Deal in "Common Clay." A new spirit of sisterly love prevails among all women, which is to do great things for civilization in the future.

In the Vernacular.

"You say Mr. Dubwaite was detained in town last night by business?" asked the visitor.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Dubwaite, in a slightly sarcastic tone. "Business of trying to look pleasant when his sweetest card was a two-act."

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

A LIBERTY MARTYR
OF LONG AGO

By A. W. MACY.

On June 7, 1381, Wat Tyler was chosen leader by 50,000 men to remonstrate with Richard II. against the oppressions of the people. On June 15 he was dead. In eight days this man, of whose antecedents and personality we know nothing, made for himself a permanent place in English history. During that time he commanded a great army; he confronted the king as an equal; he ordered the execution of the two chief ministers of the crown, and it was done; he wrested from the king a promise of social reform. But in the hour of victory, he was struck down by the hand of an enemy, and the great uprising failed in its undertaking. Yet it was not altogether in vain. It stirred to life the desire for personal liberty in the laboring people, a desire that has grown to giant proportions with the passing years. This was the first time that English peasants and laborers asserted that they were men. Centuries afterward some of the seeds thus sown found its way across the sea, and today 90,000,000 Americans owe a debt of gratitude to the memory of Wat Tyler and his men.

BUSINESS ON SUNDAY CLOSING.

Heads of the big industrial concerns of Chicago, as well as the relation between the enforcement of the Sunday-closing law and the physical and mental condition of their employees on Mondays, and naturally they are not inclined to agree with the liquorists' caustic criticism of the puritanical, undemocratic law and its enforcement. The men who manage the great industries tell us that Sunday drinking has, meant, lessened efficiency, decreased mental and moral stamina, depreciated physical vigor and the wasting of money, and consequent worry over financial conditions.

"Our workmen now come to the plants on Monday morning with clear heads and rested bodies," said a foreman of Armour and Co., the big packing house. "It was the complaint of all packers before the saloons were closed that many of the men either did not show up at all on Monday or reported with haggard faces that reduced their efficiency 50 per cent during the day, and affected it for several days thereafter."

"Now the men are on hand Monday morning with steady, unhesitant, rested bodies and minds, fit for their tasks."

"Our workmen were all on hand last Monday for the first time in years," said one of the foremen of the Illinois Steel company, the week after the Sunday-closing law was enforced.

"When we asked them what caused the change they said they had nothing to do Sunday but rest for Monday. Besides, most of them had enough of their wages left not to need to ask for advances before the next week ended."

"The closing of the saloons is a boon to industry," said one of the department managers of the International Harvester works. "When the employees have had time to note its effect, they will give it their heartiest support."

"The direct effect on this banding trades is that about 25 per cent more workmen were on hand last Monday than at any time during the period I have been handling large numbers of workmen," said a member of the Contractors' Association of Painters and Decorators.

PROSPEROUS WITHOUT LIQUOR.

Butler, Mo., is another town which is demonstrating that prosperity follows prohibition. It is today, says the Kansas City Star, "a better, richer and more prosperous town than ever. The merchants carry better stocks, the business houses are cleaner and better; the people live in better and more attractive homes and enjoy life in more rational and healthful ways. There are fewer idle people and merchants have fewer bad debts."

"When the saloons were voted out Butler had a bonded debt of something like $20,000 on the electric light plant, and it was a hard matter to meet interest payments, and the liquidation of the principal seemed a long way off. Since the closing of the saloons the debt has been paid and many needed public improvements have been made, and all without increasing the tax rate one penny. In fact the tax rate is now lower than ever before."

Boy Scouts at State Sanatorium

The preparedness movement has reached the boy patients at the State Tuberculosis Sanatoria at Mont Alto and Cresson. The Boy Scouts are well organized at both these institutions and have had regular drills under a Scout master for some time past.

The recent movement for more adequate National defense, however, has stimulated the boys to an even greater degree and they spend as much time drilling as the Medical Officer of the Institution deems their conditions will permit.

The Mont Alto Sanatorium is situated in the midst of a State Forestry Reserve, and the Cresson Institution has several hundred acres of forest land immediately surrounding it. In both places there is splendid opportunity to study wood craft, and these hours which the boys spend so happily in the forest fit in admirably with the regime which has been planned by Commissioner of Health, Samuel G. Dixon.

BACK YARDS AND CHARACTER

Little Talks on Health and Hygiene
by Samuel G. Dixon, M. D., LL. D.
Commissioner of Health.

Bret Hart once wrote a story in which he pointed out that for an insight into the occupant's true character one must look at the back and not at the front of a man's house. Here was knowledge of human nature. If we want to estimate character accurately we must have an all around view and not accept face values.

This brings us again to the question of back yards. Is your's as clean and well kept as you can make it or is it littered with trash, cans, kindling and other rubbish? Is the garbage and waste properly covered and free from flies? Is the stable and out-house a fly breeding center for the neighborhood? You have work ahead of you for your health's sake and for the sake of decency if any of these conditions exist.

It is a privilege to have a back yard even a small one. There are thousands of dwellers in cities where land is sold by the square foot, who yearn for a little space to call their own. Those who are so fortunate as to have back yards should care for them and make use of them.

If there are children in the family the back yard should be their playground. A doll house, turning pole, a swing or a tent will provide almost unlimited entertainment and help to keep children off the streets.

If there are no children in the family, a shovel, a rake, a hoe, and a moderate sized back yard garden should afford a reasonable amount of healthful exercise combined with pleasure and profit.
